THE Custom's Gazette for the second quarter Postal Union, but it is certain that the establish of the current year contains the first returns of trade at the four ports opened to trade under the Chefoo Convention. Years ago also be a great convenience at the outports. a great-deal was anticipated from the opening of some of these ports, and though these expectations have since been modified was generally believed that a remunerative trade would soon spring up at Pakhoi and Ichang. About the former very ! little was known until its formal opening as a treaty port on the 1st April last. But sanguine hopes were entertained with reference to the early development of this port as a great centre of trade for the west coast of - Kwangtung. So far these hopes have been to know if she could have the old man who gave falsified in the case of Pakhoi, while those formed on the future of the far distant port anything about the death of her child till her Ichang have been no nearer realisation. At arrival. The Hon. C. May replied that what Ichang during the quarter there was treasure imported to the amount of 3,000 tuels, while | stone out before giving the fruit to the child. But the results of the quarter's trade at Pakhoi are certainly still more astonishing the imports consisting of 5.88 piculs of opium, while the exports were absolutely nil, the revenue derivable from the opium being 177 tacls. The returns for Hoihow, on the other hand, show a rising points, and Inspector Whitchead making the denied the charge, which was proved. He was them the terms under which they signed commerce, and there is good reason to believe that a moderate and steadily improving trade will develop between Hainan and Hongkong. It is, however, much too carly to despair of Pakhoi. That port is undoubtedly well situated, and a fair trade could be developed if the foreign merchants; would only muster courage to make the attempt. The port is better situated and far more salubrious than Hollow, and there is a large population at its back. But foreigners are rather shy of trying fresh places; so many have experienced nothing but disappointment in newly opened ports that few of them are inclined to venture on the experiment of trying to develop a trade. No attempt scenis to have been made to open up trade at Pakhoi; only a solitary steamer visited it during the first quarter, and the Customs staff constitute the entire foreign community. Pakhoi has not, therefore, we repeat, had a fair trial, and we still hope to see it the seat of a thriving if not very extensive trade. The same may

On Sunday, the 26th ultimo at six o'clock there was every appearance of bad weather, and by sever some heavy squalls of wind and rain tended to make many people fear a further development of the gale. The Kearsarge sent down her topcallant masts about 6.30, and about eight o'clock the Lily followed suit with her topmasts and yards, and not long afterwards she commenced to get up steam on her anchorage was had and she was beginning to drag. A FRENCH JOURNAL ON ENGLISH POLICY.

- The Paris correspondent of the Pall Mal Guzette says - You will be amused to learn. through the columns of the Figure, now semi-official journal, that Russia would in a probability have made peace the other day "but for the foolish military demonstrations of England. In fact, what would the whole world have said had the Colessus of the North receded before 30,000 Englishmen which it would have had no trouble in throwing into the Bospherus ?" We are then assured that the Czar was very anxious to make peace and to call upon Europe to finish once for all with this everlasting Eastern Question, with these Turks, supported by England alone, who is always on the look out to preserve a relative influence by weakening others. "Every time that Europe gets too trangull in the eyes of John Bull he raises the Eastern Question. Europe fights, and is encobled, and, retired in a corner, Old England sells to the belligerents the produce. of her industry. Others are rained, but trade is brisk. This has lasted long enough. It is perhaps time to suppress the scourge by extirpating the cause." Every now and then we "invent an Emperor Theodore and go to war, and the Illustrated London News publishes the portraits of all the officers, from the general-in-chief to the junior subaltern; all; without exception, are celebrated, and the museum of Tussaud enriches its gallery with the portrait of some great general, who. would be incapable to lead more than 5,000 or, 6,000 men without allowing them to die of hunger ca route as in the Crimes; but the snobles of London take all this in a serious light. NATIVE EGYPTIANS AND THE WAR

The interest in the war takes a curious form among the native Egyptians. They absolutely refuse to belive all unfavourable news. This tendency has been encouraged by the publication of telegrams in Arabic, which, to say the least, do not declare the whole truth. It is not long since I was shown one that set forth a grand defeat of the Russian near Kars, and related how the British fleet (sic) appeared on the scene, but too late to take part in the victory. Another, I am informed, was circulated in Upper Egypt that 250,000 Russians had been slain by a mere handful of Turks. "There," said an Arab to an Englishman in that district, "did I not tell you that one Turk is equal to 20 Englishmen and 80 Russians ?" This national spirt is maintained by CHATEAU LEOVILLE POYFERRE, 1869. the publication of quaint, supernatural stories. I will give two as a sample. One of the heliest men of Mecca had a droam wherein the prophet apneared to him and said that he came direct from Allah, who declared he would no longer care for his people unless they lived most holy lives. avoided all sin, and saved all their money for the maintenance of the war. This most practical visitation was sent express to Jedda and thence telegraphed to Cairo, where it was published asa warning and encouragement to the faithful. Again, a little while ago a great fair was held near Alexandria in honour of a Saint named Sidi Gabr. whose tomb is in the centre of an Arab village and under the shadow of one of the Viceroy's FIHE HOUSEHOLD COMPANION palaces. The last night of the fair, when the fun was at its highest, when the storytellers were at the culminating point of their love tales, when the musicians were eliciting unccasing "yahe" of admiration, when the air was heavy with the fumes of coffee and tobacco, it is related by "men who saw it," that the Saint came forth from his tomb, that he straightway mounted a winged horse, which came down to him from heaven, and flew away in the direction of Stamboul. This story also has been published and widely read by the Arabs. But, notwithstanding this stimulat. ng food, the military spirit continues dormant, and the interest of the Arabs in the war is the interest of a spectator. His leaning to one side by no means inclines him to rush into the fight. When asked, for instance, whether more troops will be sent to Turkey, the invariable answer is an expression equivalent to "God forbid; Egypt has done enough," nor is there any fanaticism. Trade is a great reconciler of opposite creeds and the old cordial relations are maintained between H. believer and Gizour. Prayers for the success of the war are regited on Fridays in the mosques one is now added which even asks that the unbelievers, their goods, their wives, and their families may fall into the hands of the faithful; but it has no effect. The Egyptians are neither a fighting nor a funatical race, and the Egyptian this Work stands unrivalled. All the new Government, while willing to do its strict duty towards Turkey, has no reason or desire to do compelled to coin to express the numerous obmore.—Times' Correspondent.
